Return to a time when the Kingdom of Elden, a prosperous realm feared and respected throughout the land, stood tall. Its people were united in purpose, love, and loyalty. They worked to prepare for a golden future filled with peace, abundance, and friendship. But the outcome was not what the people expected. At the height of their power, the King declared himself the master of all and himself the God, the great king of a newly united nation of Elves. After the Elves were imprisoned, the Throne fell into the hands of the greedy and envious Nachlum. Dissension swiftly grew into unrest, and finally a war erupted. The Elves, though deprived of their magical power, were still superior in both martial skills and magic, and many Elves were slaughtered in battle. From that point on, the Elves were forced into exile by their former rulers. After generations of wandering, the Elves scattered across the world. Many believed that the Great King of Elden had been destroyed and the nation reunited, but the truth was that much of the Kingdom was destroyed after the war and from there began a long, gradual decline and eventual disappearance. The Nachlum maintained their tight control over the Lands Between. One day they will be returned to their rightful place as masters of the ancient Lands of Elden... ©2011 Paizo Publishing LLC. More Information about URT from when KoeiTomyUW Playstation.Blog - Aug 26, 2006

From PlayStation.Blog Our thinking for URT is to make a role-playing game that is unexpected and amazing from beginning to end. This game features fluid and three dimensional art work that blends beautifully with the story line. The ultimate goal of developing a role-playing game is to create a strong bond between the player and the game, transcending the gameplay and freeing the player to act in any way he desires. In order to create this kind of bond, the storytelling must be grand and unfold at a fast pace, yet compelling. The Elder Scrolls made a similar statement with their fantasy RPG, Morrowind.

We want to create aRPG that will be loved from beginning to end with a fluid presentation. For example, we want to allow the player to change clothes during the game and can move smoothly from the action of sword fighting in combat, to an investigation-based stat-sorting game. We want to create an experience where the character is 100% your own, not a generic box. For example, the character will look completely different depending on which outfits he wears and how he places his armor.

We also want to give the player unlimited freedom. No two players playing the same game will have the same character. We want to support this unlimited freedom at all times through the game and allow the player to make any decision he desires in the game world. We want to think about what is important to the player and give the player control over these important things. Items that were not actionable will be made so that the player can make use of them.

It goes without saying, that I am using the default installations. In my Pheonix (laravel 5.3) database, I have the following tables; Scores - id - user_id - round_id - score - created_at Scores_homepages - id - score - created_at The guide says to run the following: php artisan make:migration create_scores_homepages_table However, I get the error: RuntimeException: The table [scores_homepages] may not have a primary key. When I run the following it works: php artisan make:migration create_scores_homepages_table --fresh Why? A: It looks like your name_scores_homepages_table is already created in the database and you are just trying to create another table in the same name. Remove the migration name and rerun the migrate (on your sandbox) and you will be good to go. After that you should be able to run the first migration script.
